

PM's Apat na Dapat for Women Workers

The Electoral Platform of PM for Women

- A Reproductive Health law

A reproductive health law must be passed that respects women's right to choose and control their own bodies, especially with regards to pregnancy and childbirth. It must guarantee the provision of services and medicines by the government in order for women to advance their reproductive health. PM recognizes that pregnancy and childbirth are very important stages in a woman's life.

- Regular jobs and decent livelihood for women

Women deserve and need regular jobs not contractual work. To check the abuse of contractual work and discourage the spread of this epidemic, contractual workers must be granted wages that are 50% above the minimum. This is only just since contractual workers receive fewer benefits and have no security of tenure.

- Affordable housing for women and their families

The government must institute a national program that provides affordable housing for the poor. Public services for women in urban poor communities must be expanded. A moratorium on demolitions, evictions and foreclosures must be enforced for the duration of the economic crisis and while there is no new housing program.

- Public services to ease the burden on women

Adequate budget for social welfare services by the government such as day care centers, public hospitals and health centers. Establish new programs such as public laundry shops and public markets in which discounted and discounted basic goods are sold.
